Section 1: Reading Comprehension (10 Questions)

Theme: Economics & Banking — RBI's Framework for International Trade Settlement in Indian Rupees (INR) (Announced July 11, 2022)

Passage:

On July 11, 2022, the Reserve Bank of India (RBI) unveiled a transformative circular enabling the invoicing, payment, and settlement of international exports and imports in Indian Rupees (INR). Under this regulatory dispensation, any trade settled in rupees necessitates the opening of Special Rupee Vostro Accounts (SRVA) by authorized dealer (AD) category-I banks in India, partnered with the corresponding bank of the partner trading country. This initiative sought primarily to facilitate seamless commercial transactions with sanctions-hit nations—most conspicuously Russia, following its geopolitical alienation from Western financial architectures like the SWIFT messaging network—while simultaneously insulating India's domestic foreign exchange reserves against persistent dollar outflows.

Beyond serving as an immediate tactical circumvent for bilateral commerce, the policy architecture was widely lauded by macroeconomists as a seminal step toward the long-term internationalization of the Indian Rupee. By reducing dependence on hard currencies—primarily the US Dollar and the Euro—the mechanism aims to mitigate exchange rate volatility, curb transaction spreads, and lower the demand for foreign exchange liquidity during acute balance-of-payment pressures.

However, the efficacy of the rupee settlement mechanism is not without systemic impediments. A salient structural challenge is the persistent trade imbalance between India and several of its primary trade partners, such as Russia, from whom India dramatically increased imports of discounted crude oil throughout mid-2022. Because India's imports from Russia overwhelmingly outpace its non-energy exports, Russian exporters and their domestic banking institutions accumulate enormous, non-convertible rupee surpluses inside their SRVAs. Unless these accumulating balances can be effectively channeled into Indian government securities (G-Secs), domestic infrastructure projects, or non-sanctioned bilateral supply chains, foreign entities face severe capital repatriation friction and balance-sheet exposure to rupee depreciation. Thus, while the rupee-invoicing framework represents a paradigm shift in South Asian geopolitical finance, its ultimate ascension into a viable global invoicing alternative demands deeper domestic financial market liquidity, robust hedging instruments, and sustained structural export competitiveness.

1. According to the passage, what was the primary tactical catalyst behind the RBI's July 2022 rupee settlement circular?

- A) To replace the SWIFT global settlement architecture globally
- B) To assist domestic non-banking financial companies in international lending
- C) To circumvent Western sanctions and sustain seamless commerce with partner nations like Russia
- D) To mandate that all global commodity transactions be routed through Indian banks
- E) To liquidate India's entire holding of US treasury securities

2. The term "internationalization of the Indian Rupee" in the context of the passage most closely denotes:

- A) Completely eliminating the usage of all foreign exchange in domestic commerce
- B) The adoption of the INR as an internationally recognized currency for cross-border trade and reserve holding
- C) Forcing trading partner nations to surrender their domestic currencies to the RBI
- D) Mandating that Indian tourists only spend rupees when traveling abroad
- E) Pegging the value of the Indian Rupee permanently to the US dollar

3. Which of the following accounts must an authorized dealer bank in India open to facilitate this trade mechanism?

- A) Nostro Account
- B) Foreign Currency Non-Resident (FCNR) Account
- C) Non-Resident Ordinary (NRO) Account
- D) Special Rupee Vostro Account (SRVA)
- E) Exchange Earner's Foreign Currency (EEFC) Account

4. Which structural issue poses the most significant impediment to the sustained viability of the rupee-invoicing framework?

- A) The refusal of the Reserve Bank of India to permit investments in government bonds
- B) Asymmetric trade volumes causing an accumulation of idle rupee balances in partner accounts
- C) A complete prohibition on crude oil imports from non-OPEC countries
- D) Rapid appreciation of the Indian rupee against the US dollar
- E) Indian banks' total inability to process digital cross-border wire transfers

5. What can be inferred regarding the risk borne by foreign exporters holding substantial rupee balances in SRVAs?

- A) They risk sovereign default by the Indian Ministry of Finance.
- B) They are mandated to convert those funds into cryptocurrency.
- C) They remain exposed to potential currency depreciation risks of the rupee.
